Crime is a serious social problem that requires urgent attention. It is a complex phenomenon that is influenced by many factors, such as economic, social, cultural, political, and environmental. In this paper, we will analyze the causes of crime, its types, consequences, and development.

Over the past few decades, the interest in the causes of crime has grown even more. However, there is a significant lack of research, a lot of them are also controversial. Thus, some studies argue that crime may be a response of the population to low or poor employment; other studies claim that crime is a result of the low quality of living conditions, low level of education, and low population income. Also, it is argued that the reputation of judicial and law enforcement bodies is increasingly encouraging crime to thrive. These and other
